Journals	November 30, 2017

As you can see, November is a busy month, so pace yourselves. Do your research early. Work on your group projects early and use down time in Puerto Escondido to meet and work collaboratively on your group paper.

The earlier you identify a topic for your individual paper, the easier it will be to get it done. That is why you need to submit an outline and a preliminary bibliography of at least 7 journal articles 9 days before the paper is due.

We encourage you to journal daily; this is for your own records, but to have at least one weekly entry about your rotations. Many students have a personal and a class journal. The latter is to note important observations, events, or reflections that may enrich your papers and later your essays for professional and or graduate school.

I will be available for consultation on papers/projects/exams before and after class, during office hours, and on the weekend by appointment.
